

KEAMY COSMETICS CENTRE

Dr. Jean Keamy has been guiding women and men through the aging process for 25 years. She is a firm believer that aging gracefully is aging on your own terms. An excellent listener with a knack for problem-solving, she gently guides her patients through the decision process. When managing aging with cosmetic treatments, she believes you need both an artist's touch and medical expertise. Dr. Keamy's skill as an ophthalmic surgeon reassures her patients that they are in safe hands. But it is her sharp aesthetic sense, light touch, and sensitivity to each patient's concerns that make Dr. Keamy's vibrant and growing practice so successful.

What was your smartest mistake?

Not going to medical school right away. Looking back, I see that my degree in molecular biology factors into my medical expertise. My MBA gave me the business acumen to build my ophthalmology and cosmetic practice. During this time, coursework in art and photography broadened my aesthetic sensibility.

What are the secrets to your success?

I draw on all my interests and skills for my success. My artistic ability enables me to pre-visualize my outcomes in cosmetic procedures. Because I draw on my innate sense of proportions, I consider my cosmetic practice artistic as well as medical. My side passion is fine art photography, and I travel widely to capture nighttime images. I also rely on my skills as an ophthalmic surgeon to be precise and perfect.

What was your first job?

After business school and before medical school, I worked in marketing for IBM corporate and, later, as a product manager for a television network where I managed the WWF account. Yes, the World Wrestling Federation. That was one wild ride, and I wouldn't change it for the world!

What advice would you give to other women today?

I went back to medical school later than most; it was an aspiration that got put on the back burner. I recommend not ever thinking it's too late to pursue a passion. Because technology and trends advance about every five years, adjusting your goal is essential. Life is not static, embrace the changes and follow your dream.

Is there anything else you'd like to share?

I listen carefully to what each patient is looking to achieve. Often, it's not just the outcome of that singular treatment but their overall view on aging, which varies with each patient. At Keamy Cosmetic, the patient drives the treatment.
